

National Indigenous Women's Resource Center

Women Are Sacred: Exploring Women's Spirituality from an Indigenous Perspective

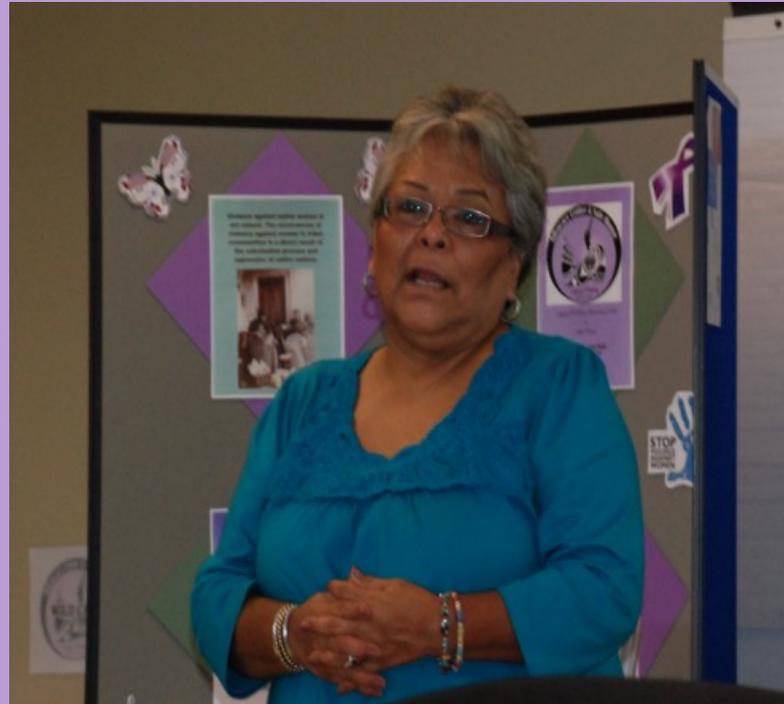

Amanda Takes War Bonnett, Oglala Lakota

Public Education Specialist, Native Women's Society of the Great Plains

Cheryl Neskahi- Coan, Dine
Program Services Coordinator,
Indigenous Crime Victim Services Referral and Resource Center

Lenora “Lynn” Hootch, Yup’ik
Executive Director, Yup’ik Women’s Coalition

Rose “Loke” Pettigrew, Native Hawaiian

Pouhana O Na Wahine (Pillar of Women) President of the Board of Directors and Native Hawaiian Domestic Violence Advocate

Key Questions for the Conversation

- What does Women Are Sacred mean?
- In the face of the impact of colonization and modern-day levels of violence against native women, how do we, as indigenous women, experience, understand, nurture and protect our sacredness?
- What are some of our traditional practices and teachings that can help us embrace indigenous women's spirituality to decolonize, help each other heal and revitalize our sacredness?

What does Women Are Sacred mean?

In the face of the impact of colonization and modern-day levels of violence against native women, how do we, as indigenous women, experience, understand, nurture and protect our sacredness?

What are some of our traditional practices and teachings that can help us embrace indigenous women's spirituality to decolonize, help each other heal and revitalize our sacredness?

Thank you!

